George Weber

• The following is an account of the salmon industry as given by G.W. Hume, the original salmon packer of the Pacific Coast, who is known as the Salmon King:

“My first experience at Salmon fishing was at the age of eight. My father was a salmon fisher on the Kennebec river, and I went with him one night to help him in place of my brother William who was away. That night we caught three salmon which was considered a large catch on the Kennebec. They weighed from fifteen to twenty pounds. It was needless to say that next day I was the proudest boy in Maine. I did not go again for a year or two until I was able to pull two oars, but I never had such success with my father as on the first night.

In 1852 my brother William left for California, returning to Maine in 1856. He remained but a few months, but when he started back to California by brother John and I accompanied him. We at once began fishing on the Sacramento River for salmon which at that time were plentiful. We fished until 1863 (using nets), but after the first year, I owned my outfit, -a boat and net, and fished for myself.

In 1862 I was in such a miserable condition, due to chills and fever, that my two brothers, after holding a consultation, decided to send me home. I returned to Maine and while there met an old schoolmate, Andrew S. Hapgood, who was then in the tin business. He suggested that we go to California and can salmon. Unfortunately, Mr. Hapgood had no capital, and I only a little, but I promised him that if my brother William would go in with us, we should start up a canning business.

I returned to California; my brother agreed to finance the undertaking, and I wrote Mr. Hapgood to come on. In the meantime I had bought a houseboat, and later fitted it with the crude machinery that Mr. Hapgood brought with him across the Isthmus. We located it in the town of Washington on the banks of the Sacramento river, opposite what is now the foot of J Street, Sacramento. I installed a farmer's boiler to cook the salmon, all our accessories being very primitive.

The first season we put up two hundred cases. But we met with reverses and, at times, were almost discouraged. Once the scow sank, and it was with great difficulty that we raised her.

Finding it almost impossible to sell the salmon, we made a trip to San Francisco and while there William T. Coleman promised to advance money on our pack. This salmon sold at $4.00 per dozen, and the money it brought in gave us a start and a stimulus. [If there were one dozen in a case, this would be $1,250.00 in 2003 dollars.]

At the end of two years, salmon became so scarce on the Sacramento that I went to select a sight [sic] on the Columbia river for a cannery, – our success on the Sacramento giving us confidence to go at the business on a larger scale.

On my trip up the Columbia river, I landed at Oak Point. Going ashore with [sic] Mr. George Abernathy, I borrowed a boat from him, and afterwards cruised up and down the Columbia looking for a sight [sic], finding one three miles below Oak Point that suited. It was covered with timber and brush. Climbing out on a fallen tree I took observations, and soon after went to the land office at Vancouver where I entered four fractional sections which gave me a mile on the Columbia.

That fall we put up our pack on the Sacramento, as usual, but when the season was over I again went north, and clearing off a place, started the first cannery on the Columbia river, naming it "Eagle Cliff." It was situated on a perpendicular cliff about one hundred feet high on the edge of which an eagle had its nest in a tree, thus suggesting the name to me.

One day while attempting to burn down a large fir tree by boring a hole in it and filling the space with live coals, the tree fell across a pile of lumbar which I had secured for building the cannery, and destroyed it. After getting more lumber from Oak Point, I commenced erecting the cannery, and in 1866 we began our first pack of salmon. Salmon were plentiful, and after packing four thousand cases, we stopped in the middle of the season for fear of breaking the market. Although Mr. Hapgood felt uneasy, I thought it best to continue, surmising that we would not have the business to ourselves long.

A disagreement arising among us, we dissolved partnership, my brother William and Mr. Hapgood taking two thirds of the land and I one third. Then I put up a cannery at "Eagle Cliff", also and that year we ran opposition, but as they were better situated than I, my pack proved the lighter.

For a partner, I had taken Mr. Smith. He did not understand the salmon business, and the second year Mr. Francis Cutting of San Francisco bought him out. As Mr. Cutting had plenty of capital we increased our pack to thirty seven thousand cases. Two boats brought in two loads every night. When the supply gave out, I would take a boat and run over to Jatham Reed's trap where salmon could be had for five cents a piece [66 cents in 2003 dollars]. This kept the cannery going steadily.

After a partnership lasting two or three years, I bought out Mr. Cutting. Later, Mr. Cutting bought me out, although he had never seen the cannery. This was in 1872, and being worth about two hundred and fifty thousand [$3,666,580 in 2003 dollars], concluded that I had money enough. With my family, I came to San Francisco. I no longer owned a cannery, and having nothing to do, soon became interested in stocks. The stock brokers predicted that in a short time they would have my scalp. I became a silent partner of V[], putting a man in with him by the name of H[] to look after my interests with the understanding that they were only to buy and sell on commission and not to speculate.

Meanwhile, Mr. Cutting asked me to instruct his man in the salmon process. With the understanding of having one third of the profits, I returned to the cannery for six weeks.

When I came back to San Francisco to look after my interest in the stock brokerage business, I found that V[] and H[] had speculated to such an extent that my capital was exhausted. This caused me to dissolve partnership and I ran my own business for a year or more. I soon found that I was in a business that I was not capable of handling;- I had lost about a hundred thousand. Finally, there came a fire in Con Virginia. I shorted everything along the line and filled the next day, making ninety three thousand dollars. I then walked into the stock board to tell them that they hadn't gotten my scalp yet, and that they wouldn't get it because I intended to leave them for good.

The freighting business between San Francisco and Oregon next claimed my attention, but after a year of it, I was restless to get back into the canning business again.

For thirty seven thousand dollars [$722,840 in 2003 dollars] I bought a mill and cannery at Astoria, Oregon. With the mill I supplied the town with lumber. It was a one-horse affair containing one circular saw, a sash saw and planer, but being the only mill in the locality, there was ready sale for the lumber.

While operating the mill, I built a cannery on the Umpqua river, which I soon sold as the salmon on the Umpqua proved of poor quality, and started one at the mouth of the Wishkah river where Mr. Benn had given me a point of five acres, I named the point Aberdeen, and it still retains the name. For two years I ran this cannery at the end of which I was compelled to sell it on account of ill health. The inside property of the mill I sold to a syndicate after a few years for fifty two thousand dollars [$980,000 in 2003 dollars]. I was then acting as agent for about ten canneries, but my illness of 1880 compelled me to give up these agencies and to sell my entire holdings on the Columbia.

When my health improved, I started a cannery at Benecia under the name of the Carquinez Packing Company, – its purpose being to pack salmon and fruits. Afterwards I started a cannery at Karluk, Alaska, and another on Cock's inlet. These I held for about two years and then put them into the Alaska Packer's Association at a good figure. I was on the board of the Alaska Packer's Association for about twelve years and was one of its original members. Later being well along in years I refused to run as director again at the annual election. I put my stock on the market then and sold a profit of five hundred thousand dollars [$9,768,075 in 2003 dollars].

Since 1856 when I made my start on the Sacramento River as a young man packing salmon, that industry has steadily increased along the Pacific Coast, from my pioneer pack of two hundred cases to one of millions annually. [4563]

- My name is Donn Waters. I grew up on property that was once the Hume AKA Glen Una Ranch in Los Gatos, CA ergo my interest in the Hume family.

In ca. 1889 George W.Hume gave the 800 acre ranch as a wedding gift to his son and new wife Una Handy Hume. In a short period and presumably with financial backing from his father, GFH built the property into a world renown operation then suddenly GFH died at the age of 24.

I would appreciate any information you can give me in regards to GFH's death. Thank you. [6454]

W.R. Hume Returns From the Earthquake District

RELIEF SUPPLIES WASTED

Mr. Hume Says Many Carloads of Supplies Were Allowed to Spoil in Yards - No System at First.

W.R Hume has returned from Oakland and San Francisco where he went immediately after the earthquake. He states that his family which resides in Oakland escaped all harm, and aside from the fatigue attendant upon the excitement, are well.

Mr. Hume upon his arrival was detailed by Mayor Mott and Governor Pardee, whom he knows personally, to act as a sort of intermediary between General Funston in charge of the army, and the civil authorities, in regard to arranging...
[newspaper clipping mangled here]

"A great many of the carloads of perishable food simply spoiled in the yards, where they were left for days. Other cars were rifled, and for a time it seemed that no order could be brought out of the chaos that existed. The relief committees were unable to cope with the situation, but now that the army has charge things are becoming better, and most of the graft is being cut out.

Continuing Mr. Hume stated that the ruin and desolation in San Francisco, are utterly beyond the comprehension of one who has not seen it. "It is totally impossible to adequately describe what destruction the fire and quake have wrought. The entire business section of the great city, is in ashes; the broken and blackened skeletons of those immense steel structures which formerly graced the city, loom up against the sky, in grim mockery of man's efforts to defy the flames. The mammoth steel girders, are warped and twisted by the blasting heat which overcame them, and many of the supposedly fire-proof buildings will have to be torn down.

"Official figures which have been prepared show that in San Francisco the burned district includes an area of 16 square miles, or 3,070 blocks. Sixty thousand buildings were burned in this district, and the property loss will amount to $400,000,000 of which about $200,000,000 is covered by insurance." [5190]

- They lived in Alamo/Danville, CA and had a ranch (The Yellowjacket) up at Calistoga, CA. At the time they raised and showed Arabian horses.

Leroy was a very successful businessman (electrical contractor or manufacturer, I don't recall) and I think his son, George, now has the business which is in the San Francisco Bay Area.

Leroy's relationship to me was that he and my mother had the same great grandparent from Switzerland. [169]

- LeRoy was against the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II and served as custodian of the property of some of these persons.

Awarded the French War Cross (Croix de guerre) for service in World War I. [4533, p 1]

- "I [Hermann Krüsi] remember one day with a similarly beautiful morning – possibly fourteen years ago – when our little family, increased by some boarders, one of whom was our trusty friend Dr. Farnham, walked for nearly a mile on the frozen, uneven ice, admiring the little ice-mounds and hills. I suppose little Gertie was too small to accompany us, but she welcomed her good friend Farnham on his return with her sweetest smile as, "Lily Roy" (Le Roy). [4533, p 2]

- I finally found out who "LeRoy Farnham" was – a friend of his grandfather's

(Hermann II) who was a boarder in his house and who, apparently, his children were fond of. [4538]

Raymond Gorham

- At 1921 Thanksgiving dinner, 3014 Clay Street, San Francisco. [172]
- Signed guest book at wedding of Joy Folger Matteson and Eleanor Carlisle Eckart. [6302, p 3]
- He attended the University [of California] where he was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity and is in business in San Francisco. [6397]
- The business (the cannery) had been sold profitably some time before his death. I rather thought that was the case as my own Hume ancestors, and even myself, carried forward profit from the old Hume businesses. [4542]
- On the following page, there is more inaccurate information. It states that Raymond Hume ran the Hume Canneries. There was only one Hume Cannery at that time and it was sold in 1968. My father's portion of the receipts from this sale supported both he and my mother Margaret until their deaths in 1975 (my father) and 1978 (my mother).

I am enjoying reading the information of the Eckart Family. It is very informative to me. [6679]

- My father and mother were being supported by trusts (set up at the time of the sale of the Hume Company in 1968) when they died in 1975 (father) and 1978 (mother). [6685]

William Jr.

- William HUME, a pioneer in the salmon industry, was born in Waterville, Me., the son of William and Harriett (HUNTER) HUME. His grandfather, of Scotch descent, and his father were fishermen. As a youth he spent little time in school, and when he was twenty-two years of age he went to California. There he fished and hunted for a living along the Sacramento River. In 1856 he went back to Maine and returned to California that same year with his two brothers, John and George W. HUME. The latter had a friend in Maine, Andrew S. HAPGOOD, who had learned the tinsmith trade and had done a little canning of lobster meat. He was persuaded to come to California and in 1864 the canning firm of Hapgood, Hume & Company was established on the Sacramento River at Washington, Yolo County. The cannery was a crude affair and William HUME peddled the first cans of fish from door to door, carrying them about in a basket. Finding the run of fish in the Sacramento rather disappointing, Hume did some prospecting on the Columbia River in 1865, and the following year a cannery was built at Eagle Cliff, Wash., the first on the Columbia. Here the Royal Chinook salmon, cooked in the cans, was packed. During its opening season the firm put up 4,000 cases, each containing four dozen one-pound cans, and the next season 18,000. The most of the early product was sold in Australia. The industry grew rapidly and in 1881 had become the most extensive in the Northwest, with the exception of wheat raising. Of the thirty-five canneries on the Columbia at that time more than half had been established by the Hume brothers. When the industry reached its height in 1883, William Hume's interest in it was larger than that of any other individual. It absorbed his interest until his death. He was conservative in business, introduced no new machinery, and opposed the establishment of salmon hatcheries. He never sought public office, was a member of no church nor secret society. In 1876 he was married to Emma LORD of San Francisco. [4562]
